FOREWORD

Incredibly poor flying weather dominated the efforts of the 23rd Tactical Fighter Wing during the first six months of 1969. With a demanding RTU schedule to meet, the Wing had to make up more than 3,000 flying hours lost to weather in January, February, and March. By reverting to centralized scheduling and requiring 1.2 sorties per day per aircraft, the RTU classes were kept on schedule.

A total of 60 combat-ready F-105 pilots were graduated during this period with four classes in training at the close of the period totaling 74 students. Additionally, over 200 SEAMAT students were graduated in support of Southeast Asia requirements.

An indication of the effort being made to improve all facets of the Wing came early in the period when the Twelfth Air Force General Inspection noted a drop in repeat discrepancies from 78 to 15. This attention to procedural detail paid off when the loss of eight aircraft in the last reporting period (July to December, 1968) was reduced to two aircraft lost in the first six months of 1969.

This history records the problems and achievements of the Wing during the first six months of 1969. Grateful acknowledgement is made to all persons who contributed to its preparation. This history is subject to revision and correction. All recommendations will be graciously received and objectively evaluated.

COMMANDER'S APPRAISAL

The first half of 1969 saw a marked improvement in the 23rd Tactical Fighter Wing. In spite of the worst flying weather in years, the Wing graduated all of our RTU classes on schedule. More importantly, a vastly improved flying safety record was established with a 75% reduction in accidents over the previous six months.

After losing nearly half of our scheduled sorties in the first quarter, we were forced to go to a 1.2 sortie rate, six days a week. An intensive upgrading of the RTU operation proceeded through the use of standardization and trend analysis. The tendency to cut corners to catch up had to be overcome. To the credit of our supervisors, procedures were tightened throughout the Wing.

Our support activities were recognized throughout the period as being among the best. The base newspaper, CONTRAILS, was named Best in the Air Force in its class. The Wing Intelligence section won the TAC Achievement Award with other TAC winners being our Procurement Office and Major Stark Sanders, named the Outstanding Young Judge Advocate of 1968. Additionally, the Wing was cited for its safety check program by the Auto Industries Highway Safety Committee.

These accomplishments came during a time of continuous personnel turbulence caused by the reduction in manpower. Our mission remained approximately equal to the prior six months while our assigned strength was cut by fourteen per cent. I am proud of the people of the Wing for the way in which they responded to the challenge. When I asked for their maximum effort, I got it. I am confident that the excellence displayed this year will be reflected in future histories of the Flying Tigers.

MISSION, ORGANIZATION, AND ADMINISTRATION

The 23d Tactical Fighter Wing is located at McConnell AFB, Wichita, Kansas. It is assigned to the 835th Air Division,¹ which is tenant at McConnell, and to 12th Air Force.

The Wing has been at McConnell since 8 February 1964, when its predecessor organization, the 388th Tactical Fighter Wing, was redesignated as the 23d TFW.² The Wing's first role was that of an operational F-105 unit. Several squadrons were deployed to Southeast Asia in 1964 and 1965, but all were returned in the fall of 1965 to support the Wing's new mission of training pilots in the operation of the Republic Aviation F-105 Thunderchief.³ Concurrently, F-105 units at Nellis and Seymour-Johnson Air Force Bases were deactivated, making McConnell the only active F-105 base in the continental United States.

The training program degraded the operational mission of the Wing to secondary status and adversely affected the Wing's combat-ready potential. This problem was partially alleviated in April 1968 when Tactical Air Command ordered the reorganization of the Wing, giving each tactical fighter squadron the capability of independent, simultaneous operation with its own maintenance, supply, and transportation resources.⁴

In general terms, the mission of the Wing is to:⁵

a. Organize, equip, train, and administer forces assigned or attached;

1. 835AD Reg 23-1, 17 July 1967.

2. S.O. G-14, Hq TAC, 28 Jan 1964.

4. CONFIDENTIAL AFM 2-40, Chap III, para 16a, CONUS. (UNCLASSIFIED)

5. 835AD Reg 23-1, 17 Jul 1967.

- b. Provide combat aircrew training as may be directed by the 835th Air Division or higher headquarters;
- c. Train for and maintain a capability that will insure compliance with current emergency war plans, disaster control plans, operational orders, and operational plans;
- d. Conduct training and provide advisory assistance as required by current directives and as otherwise directed for designated Air Reserve Forces units.

To carry out its primary mission of aircrew training, the Wing conducts three courses:⁶

- a. USAF Operational Training Course 111506B (F-105);
- b. USAF Operational Training Course 111106B (F-105);
- c. AT-33 Familiarization Course 111501E.

USAF Operational Training Course 111506B (F-105) was terminated on 30 April 1969 with the graduation of class 69GR.⁷ The terminated course was based on 92 flying hours while Course 111106B requires 120 flying hours.

The AT-33 Familiarization Course was discontinued on 25 April 1969 with the consolidation of lead-in training at Myrtle Beach AFB, S.C., as part of a TAC program.⁸ AT-33 aircraft from the 23d TFW were moved to Myrtle Beach AFB with the program change.

Other training conducted by the Wing includes Instructor Pilot Upgrade training in F-105 aircraft (Course I-111506B)⁹; Category IV (refresher) training in the F-105;¹⁰ and Southeast Asia Maintenance (SEAMAT) training, involving 15 direct Air Force specialty codes.¹¹

The 835th Air Division has delegated certain responsibilities for training and inspection of Air National Guard units under the Division to the 23d Wing. This includes primarily advisory visits and on-the-job training at McConnell AFB.¹² Units involved under this commitment are:

122nd Tactical Fighter Wing (Indiana ANG),
Baer Field, Fort Wayne, Indiana; and

136th Air Refuelling Wing (Texas ANG),
Dallas, Texas.

Subordinate units of the 23d TFW were redesignated from '835' prefixes to '23' prefixes on 8 June 1969.¹³ ~~was~~ The redesignation followed by nearly a year the realignment of '835th' support units under the 23d TFW Command. In 1965 the 23d TFW and 355th TFW were co-located at McConnell AFB and the support unit was assigned to the 835th Air Division. When the 355th was deployed to Thailand in 1965 as part of the SEA buildup, the support group continued to report to the AD until it became apparent that a more workable organization was to assign the Support Group to the Wing. Units affected by the redesignation are the Combat Support Group, Tactical Hospital, Supply Squadron, Civil Engineering Squadron, Transportation Squadron, and Services Squadron. These units inherit the campaign streamers and decorations of the new designation.¹⁴
